

Mail: Dealing With Problems

Graduate Mail: Dealing With Problems Module

OVERVIEW

This module almost perfectly replicates the Dealing With Problems section of the 2004 mail survey. It presents the participant with 17 potentially stressful life events/problems and asks for the following information: (1) if the participant has ever experienced the event, (2) age at first (or only) occurrence, and (3) age at most recent occurrence. Based on this information, four summary variables are constructed for each event:

JD__CRE: Did the participant ever experience this event?
JD__ARE: Age at first/only occurrence
JD__BRE: Age at most recent occurrence
JD__DRE: Did the participant provide an illogical age pattern?

Each life event/problem is indexed by a different number sequence. Life-threatening floods, fires, storms or other disasters, for example, are denoted by "004". Thus, the summary variables associated with them are as follows: JD004CRE, JD004ARE, JD004BRE, and JD004DRE.

In addition to this information about participants' experiences with specific life events/problems, additional items (18) focus on coping strategies and/or reactions to difficult or stressful life events in general.

Note: This variable is based on the information the participant provided about both the first/only and last time they experienced the stressful life event in question, as well as a check box for having never experienced such an event. If the participant provided valid data on the first/only or last time they experienced the event, they were assigned a value of "1" on JD001CRE regardless of whether or not they also contradicted themselves by checking the box for having never experienced the event. This represents a departure from the Dealing with Problems Module of the 2004 mail survey. During the 2004 collection wave, checking a box for having never experienced a stressful life event took precedence over valid age data, if provided (resulting in a value of "2" on this variable's 2004 predecessor even if valid age data existed).

Note: This variable is based on the information the participant provided about both the first/only and last time they experienced the stressful life event in question, as well as a check box for having never experienced such an event. If the participant provided valid data on the first/only or last time they experienced the event, they were assigned a value of "1" on JD070CRE regardless of whether or not they also contradicted themselves by checking the box for having never experienced the event. This represents a departure from the Dealing with Problems Module of the 2004 mail survey. During the 2004 collection wave, checking a box for having never experienced a stressful life event took precedence over valid age data, if provided (resulting in a value of "2" on this variable's 2004 predecessor even if valid age data existed).
